MEMORANDUM FOR:

FROM

Administrative Officer, DCI

SUBJECT : Travel Allowances When Accompanying the Director to San Francisco

1. As you requested we have checked JTRs applicable to military personnel assigned to CIA which we are compelled to adhere to and they are as follows:

a) It is the policy of the DDA that aides travelling with the Director and required to reside in the same hotel as the Director (per DCI's instructions) will not be required to assume the lodging costs from within the per diem allowance. The Agency will assume the cost of the lodging in total as "government furnished quarters." Therefore, while staying at the Stanford Court in San Francisco, we will pick up the entire cost of a single room without charge to your per diem allowance.

b) JTRs require a reduction in the authorized per diem allowance of 50 percent when government quarters are furnished (the per diem in San Francisco is $41.00 and in Los Angeles $40.00) unless there are "unusual circumstances" in which case we can reimburse for actual expenses up to the maximum amount of actual expenses authorized. This means that if you are required to incur meal costs in excess of $20.00 (or $20.40 in San Francisco), please be prepared to explain the unusual circumstances and to provide receipts wherever possible.

c) With respect to travel by rental automobile between San Francisco and Los Angeles for personal reasons in lieu of travel by commercial aircraft, you are limited under the JTRs to an allowance of .07 per mile or the cost of commercial aircraft, whichever is the lesser. According to my information, it is 424 miles between Los Angeles and San Francisco and at .07 per mile this would be $29.68. The airfare is $26.00, therefore, the latter figure will be the reimbursement authorized.

2. In any event we will go over your accountings with you item by item upon your return and try to give you the best legal break. Hope this clarifies your situation.

Dear Dave,

During one of our stimulating conversations at Sanderling, you mentioned that you had difficulty in determining just where our oil supplies were actually being consumed. I asked one of my staff to check with Dr. Schlesinger's office, and enclosed is a breakdown of the 1975 and 1976 statistics. It really shows that busses, trucks and cars are the big consumers - 55% of the total.

Pat and I certainly found it a great treat to have an opportunity to be with you and Helen as well as the California clan. We are so pleased that we had that day of overlap.

Look forward to seeing you both again soon.

All the best.

Dear Cherie and Winn,

Just a quick note to say how delighted we are that you will both be around when we, hopefully, come to San Diego. Winn's mother led us to believe that Winn might be in Pascagoula.

This is just to let you know that the status of our trip is unfortunately very much up in the air. I may or may not be able to make it. It appears almost certain to me that it will not be the week of the 8th as I had hoped, but perhaps the following week for a day or two. Please bear with us and we will stay in touch and let you know. This probably means we'll just have to get together with you without any other guests, and perhaps on short notice as things are just a bit busy!

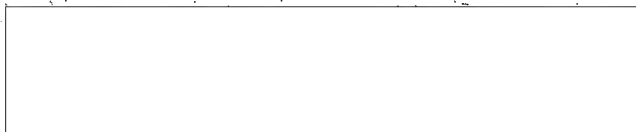

We really hope we'll have the chance. In the meantime, all the best from both of us.

The Many Studies About the United States Intelligence

Apparatus End the Same Way: Reform Is Needed

The Carter Solution Is To Try Centralizing

By NICHOLAS M. HORROCK

W

ASHINGTON—When Senate and House Committees completed their investigations of the operations of the intelligence community last year, several conclusions stood out:

- The intelligence agencies had been allowed to operate without sufficient direction, either by the President or by Congress.

- Their structure and their secrecy made it nearly impossible to trace responsibility for abuses. As one weary member of the Senate Intelligence Committee put it in 1975: "It was like the old joke. 'Nobody was driving. We were all in the back seat.'"

- The $5 billion—until recently, $6 billion—intelligence apparatus was cumbersome, "redundant" (in Governmentese, that means it has enormous duplication of effort) and often didn't collect the information the President needed to know when he needed to know it.

Last Thursday President Carter took an important step toward dealing with some of these questions: He centralized more administrative power under the director of Central Intelligence than that official has possessed since the agency was set up in 1947.

In Washington, centralization of power is no panacea for abuse. Indeed, the history of the intelligence community over the last three decades suggests that it was at its worst when it had its greatest power. It was, for instance, part of the sad chapter of the Chilean affair—the United States involvement in the downfall of President Salvador Allende Gossens—that a former director, Richard Helms, left President Nixon's office feeling he had "a marshal's baton under his arm."

But in President Carter's move there is also centralization of responsibility. Now, presumably, the President can ring up Adm. Stansfield Turner, his director of Central Intelligence, ask "What's this I hear" about an intelligence matter and be talking to the man responsible. By the same token, the two Congressional oversight committees should be able to get their answers and issue their advice through Admiral Turner.

Members of the Senate Intelligence Committee and Admiral Turner both had contemplated an intelligence reorganization that would have put even greater power into the director's hands. They would have made him "Director of National Intelligence."

NEW YORK TIMES

Under Admiral Turner's plan, he would have had "line authority" over the men and women of the National Security Agency, the National Reconnaissance Office and the Defense Intelligence Agency, all of which are part of the Department of Defense. But reportedly, Vice President Mondale, who was a member of the 1975 Senate committee that investigated intelligence agencies, and Bert Lance, Mr. Carter's confidant and manager of the budget, opposed the plan on the ground that it would have placed too much of what in Washington is called "juice" at the admiral's fingertips.

It would clearly have been more expedient if Admiral Turner had had such line authority. Then he could pick up the telephone and simply order the National Security Agency to conduct certain types of electronic surveillance. No one is suggesting that Admiral Turner would be the man to misuse this power, and turn to the agency to, say, eavesdrop on members of the Senate. But the fact that the Secretary of Defense has appeal powers on budget and retains line authority in his field keeps some check and balance on what Admiral Turner or his successors may decide to do.

From his appointment last March, Admiral Turner has had the mandate of improving the "national intelligence estimates" upon which the country bases its foreign policy decisions. Several recent Presidents have been uncomfortable with them. In the early 1970's, for instance, Henry A. Kissinger, President Nixon's adviser for national security affairs, found intelligence reports waffled on key points and were vague and unspecific. Many of the men who investigated the intelligence community in 1975-76 came away with the feeling that the quality of intelligence estimates was poor because gathering intelligence was simply not the top priority of the intelligence agencies.

That is explained in part by the histories of the men who dominated the Central Intelligence Agency and to some extent the military agencies. Generally, they were veterans of World War II's Office of Strategic Services, and early Cold Warriors, more intent on covert foreign operations and adventures than on careful gathering and analysis of information. But now, in the last quarter of the century, intelligence means much more than finding out Soviet troop displacements, and it is in the last quarter of the century that Admiral Turner and his successors must operate. The Admiral has already moved to improve how raw intelligence data is organized and analyzed, and his new power to "cast" (Governmentese for assign) other agencies to gather particular data is expected to sharpen and improve the reports.

President Carter's announcement of the director of Central Intelligence's new role did not mention foreign covert operations. But a good many people in Washington, within the intelligence agencies and without, read what might be called an invisible ink message. It was that the era of such adventures is at an end.

The Congressional committees recommended that the United States investment in manipulative foreign covert operations be radically reduced. Some of Mr. Mondale's protégés at the White House suggested earlier this year that such a capability should not only be drastically reduced but removed from Central Intelligence's purview. The President's reorganization hasn't chosen to do that. But as one old agency hand said over a lunch a week ago. "There won't be any more Angolas for a while."

Nicholas M. Horrock is a reporter in the Washington bureau of The New York Times.

Dear Mr. Powell:

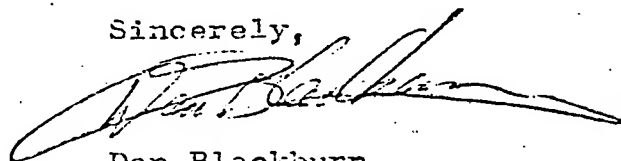

This is to renew an invitation that encompasses not only President Carter but yourself and other members of the Administration who may be interested and--from time to time--available. The invitation is to join with members of The Friday Group for an on-the-record breakfast during future visits by the President and other Administration members to Los Angeles.

As you will recall from last year's campaign, The Friday Group is the West Coast counterpart of Godfrey Sperling's breakfast and membership includes the regional bureau chiefs and political reporters of most major news media operations maintaining offices here. I have the task of serving as chairman. The breakfasts begin at 9:00am, last for about an hour and are usually--but not always--held on Fridays. Guests are asked to reserve approximately 10 minutes following the breakfast for the taping of a short Q & A by the radio and television members of the group since recording is not permitted during the breakfast itself.

As you know, President Carter met with The Friday Group during his campaign and we would, of course, like to have him back once again. But we would also like to have yourself and other high ranking members of the Administration. We do stipulate that the guest not hold a news conference in Los Angeles on the same day as the breakfast since that would, of course, defeat much of the purpose of the meeting.

I shall look forward to hearing from you and, hopefully, to seeing you in the not too distant future.

Sincerely,

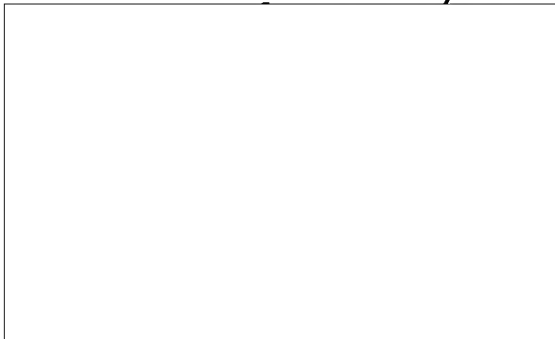

Dan Blackburn,
